SOCIAL LITERACY

Joelyn N. Pagaduan

March 02, 2026

After reading about social literacy, I realized that it is not just about reading and writing. Social literacy is about how we interact with other people and how we behave in a community. It is the ability to communicate well, build good relationships, and understand social cues like facial expressions and tone of voice.

I learned that social skills are very important in our daily lives. Simple things like greeting others, listening carefully, and being kind are all parts of being socially literate. In the modern world, technology also plays a big role. We need to learn how to communicate properly through emails and social media. As a student, I should practice how to be more responsible with my words and actions because they affect the people around me.

As a future educator, social literacy is very important to me. I need to be a good role model for my students. I want to teach them not only academic lessons but also how to respect others and work together as a team. Learning how to be socially literate helps us become better citizens. It makes our community a more peaceful and happy place to live in.